

Poole Pottery thimbles

Have you ever had the opportunity to visit the Poole Pottery in Poole, on the south coast of England? It was such a happy experience back in 1973 to visit and to watch the artists at this pottery with the gorgeous handpainted pottery, set right on the quay at Poole.

The internet suggests there are now two potteries operating - the original in Poole and another in Staffordshire - those in these areas may know?

Once I became a thimble collector a decade later, I was determined to find a Poole thimble for my collection. The thimble output is small so it should be relatively easy for you to find their whole output?

Two thimble designs featured in the monthly TCC club thimbles for their members - Country Berries and Seagulls: the latter dates from 1986. According to the accompanying leaflet Poole Pottery began in 1873, where they manufactured ceramic tiles, with their clays coming from the Dorset Hills. Using regional artists, they contributed their talents to Poole Pottery.

Their thimble range would date to the 1980s.

"The Hallmarked Thimbles of the World's Great Porcelain Houses" set of 50 issued by the Thimble Collectors Club in 1985, features the Poole Pottery dolphin logo for the Poole thimbles.

One of my favourite issues is the monochrome blue one featuring Poole Quay.

The thimbles are sturdy - a bit reminiscent of Coalport thimbles - and well made with no gilding and one could go far to find this quality in thimbles today. Some of the thimbles have a ridged self-pattern around the rim.

Three of their floral designs are known as Ophelia – Rosalind – Cymbeline. I have only been able to identify the last design
