

Ray Nimmo's thimbles (RN) 2007-2020

My first email from Ray was in 2004 in which he signed off with "All the very best to you from upover" – which showed his wicked sense of humour – often portrayed in his thimbles. Examples of this is his use of rebus (where an image replaces a word) and playing with words (nobody's prefect)

"I've never copied an existing thimble though admittedly I've made thimbles "in the style of". You will recognise some of Horner's daisy, star, diamond, Louise, a la Nimmo style. He was fascinated by the tall Jacobean strapwork thimbles – you will find some of his examples here

Ray began creating his handmade thimbles in 2007 – working in his garage. He gradually added to the tools he used, experimenting with various patterns. Some of his thimbles became his stock thimbles, to which he could add embellishments - lettering or symbols to these plainer thimbles, and these are marked # below

Nimmo's stock thimbles awaiting lettering or attachments

Up until 2013 his thimbles are not assayed. He had his mark registered with the Birmingham Assay Office on 11 June 2013. The earlier thimbles were marked STERLING with his maker's mark. Some of Ray's early thimbles have a small mark. It is a griffin mark

Most of the attributed names or descriptions were used by RN which I have marked *. The other names are my best guess

If you are interested in knowing how Ray went about his creating his thimbles, please just ask for a copy of Ray's step-by-step instructions. He was self-taught and wasn't afraid to experiment

Note the many different thimble shapes and sizes used and the many types of rims Nimmo used various body finishes: satin finish – frosted – textured satin finish – frosted – textured

With his brass thimbles, Nimmo sometimes used an antiqued finish

Nimmo bought different punches as his expertise grew and used them in different combinations

22 punches

Nimmo's domed apexes are fairly standard brass – nickel silver – sterling

You may notice that a few of Ray's thimbles have a number (DORA, showing 8 and 9) – this is not a size mark as his thimbles were not sized. In this case it is the year that they were made

Thimbles are arranged with no regard for their date they were made. Most of Nimmo's thimbles have a distinctive front side – this is the only side I've shown - where the design wraps around, the full scene is shown

Nimmo uses Indian silver for a few of his thimbles. These reflect Raj designs. They are not marked in any way as he couldn't guarantee the silver as sterling

Sterling silver thimbles – placenames

Using his variously patterned thimbles as the base, Nimmo engraved placenames or applied city coat-of-arms

Quoting from Ray: "Across the world there are scores of places with naughty or risqué sounding names.

Many are hilarious and worthy of a giggle; some are shockingly rude. Foreign place names are usually pretty innocuous in their native languages but can come as a surprise to English speakers. As place name thimbles are quite commonly collected here is my tribute to the more exotic places I've stumbled across. Made in sterling silver by WTF which stands for Willow Tree Forge...or maybe it's what you really think it is!"

Quoting from emails from 2012, Ray wrote "Many of those abandoned in the garage are incomplete and will remain so because of the solder crisis! Not sure if I'll ever make a brass thimble again".
