

British royalty on thimbles

HM King Charles III

Diana – Camilla

14 November 1948

I have followed the production of royal commemorative thimbles since I began collecting thimbles.

I lived in London during 1969 and tho I watched the Prince Charles's Investiture on television, buying a commemorative thimble never crossed my mind - commemorative stamps were more in vogue then.

The big occasion for commemorative thimbles in the United Kingdom was the marriage of Prince Charles to Lady Diana Spencer in 1981. I eagerly sought one for my new thimble collection in 1984.

What has amazed me in doing this study on British royal thimbles, is how it reflects the history of the modern thimble making industry in the UK. I don't think there is a British modern thimble producer who has not had at least one royal commemorative thimble created in the last 70 years (Royal Doulton does spring to mind but they are not big thimble producers). The first commemorative china thimbles by Caverswall was as early as 1977 for the silver jubilee and no royal occasion passed until 1991 without a Caverswall commemorative thimble - Sutherland seems to have taken over this role when Caverswall closed and they were one of the few china producers making thimbles in any quantity in Britain until they closed. The 1980s' production of royal thimbles reads like a who's who amongst thimble producers/manufacturers. To date 97 different British thimble makers have produced at least one royal commemorative thimble design.

There are 28 British silversmiths who have produced royal commemoratives of which 21 produced only one royal commemorative thimble design - they will be well worth seeking out. I hope that some of these royal thimbles produced in the last 70 years become the antiques of the future, matching the rare and highly desirable sterling silver thimbles produced in the middle of Victoria's reign.

Often there will be two thimbles for the same event by the same thimble maker - using the engagement photos of Charles and Diana for their wedding and then another with the wedding picture. Or "Birth of a royal baby..." thimbles designed before the actual birth and then a sequel with the actual details of the baby born.

The biggest number of different thimbles produced for any single occasion was that for the wedding of Charles and Diana: 79 different thimbles, many of which are sets!! Their marriage in 1981 was the heyday of modern collectables thimble making!!

I have chosen to list the thimbles in a manner which I hope will become familiar to you with use, and I know there are hundreds of royal thimble collectors out there - chronologically for each member of the royal family listing thimbles for all their various birthdays, marriages and in some cases memorial thimbles. I have grouped the family of each member of the royal family together ie Princess Anne's children are featured under the Princess Anne heading etc.

Being a British institution, 98% of royal thimbles produced were made in the UK, so it was surprising to find a few royals thimbles from Europe and three have now surfaced from the USA for more recent royal anniversaries.

The wording on each thimble is as varied as the number of thimbles produced - some have just a commemorative year; others fit an entire biography lettered on the verso. There are always official royal photographs issued at royal milestones. Most thimble producers have ignored these and created a unique design different from their competitors, reflecting their prestige in the souvenir market. Prince of Wales feathers feature prominently.

I am sure there are many royal thimbles that have not yet crossed my path - there are around 1800 recorded here across all the royal family- please be sure to share your favourite royal thimbles that I may have missed.
