

Kay Thetford-Kendall sterling silver thimbles

This English silversmith designed and made her silver thimbles during the early 1980s, with a few new designs in the 1990s. The Thimble Society of London regularly stocked her thimbles - with moulded small animals around the thimbles and rounded apexes - from 1983 onwards. In 1998, the Society obtained the last examples of Kay's collectable thimbles for sale, as Kay had by then moved on to sculpting life-size figures.

Kay's maker's mark is DWK and it is registered at the London Assay Office. It seems that her husband Donald W Kendall registered the mark, hence the confusion, as her mark doesn't feature Kay's initials. The first hallmark date was 1982 and the last one was 1997.

There are many "ring-ins" - poor, cast copies of Kay's popular designs - the apexes are always flat and the maker's marks are very indistinct or missing, with poor definition of the horizontal stripes. These thimbles were being reproduced in Turkey in the 2000s.

Look for noticeably clear hallmarks with good indentations on the rounded apex, to know you have a genuine DWK thimble.

Designs have changed over the decade, but her themes recurred - I have tried to indicate the first year these were made. Some designs have indentations, others have elongated striped indentations.

There were three commemoratives made by Kay Kendall – all in 1986.

The thimble names ascribed are mine alone and are purely descriptive.

Recently a second maker's mark for Kay has been discovered, which was used on her later commemorative thimbles Royal Wedding of Prince Andrew. This is her own mark KE
