

Innes Mitchell

pyrographed wooden thimbles

Scotland

Looking back over the plus thirty years since I began collecting thimbles, I realised what a major part The Thimble Collectors Guild/Scotland Direct/The Thimble Guild played in bringing their local thimble makers to the awareness of the collectables-thimbles-market worldwide - especially in the early to mid-1980s.

The Guild was founded in January 1983 by Arthur Bell in Lanark, and then moved to Biggar also in Scotland. The Guild exposed us to thimble makers that we would not have encountered. Through their monthly mail order catalogues, individual thimble Scottish craftsmen were promoted thru their sales.

We have seen thru the Guild the finest thimbles that Scotland has to offer local silversmiths like Philip Campbell of Mull in the Hebrides
Carol Edwards of Lewis in the outer Hebrides' thimbles' Coll Pottery
Christine Philp of Skye in the Hebrides' wooden thimbles
Highland China
Heather McLean of Balandra Crafts' wooden thimbles
Lesley Lamb of Ross-shire's handpainted sycamore thimbles
John and Meg Urwin's thimbles
Norley Swanson's wooden painted thimbles etc.

I know you will have your own favourite.

I am intrigued to know whether in the early 1980s the Guild went around Scotland searching for thimble makers, to commission them or did the thimble makers come to the Guild with their creations? Sadly, that era of thimble makers has long gone and in Britain the great majority of thimbles in 2018 are decaled china thimbles. The Guild ceased their paper catalogues in August 2018.

I was introduced to pyrography on wooden thimbles by the Guild – those of Innes Mitchell. I must laugh at myself tho. Until I started to look back thru my Mitchell collection of thimbles and back issues, looking at their maker's story – I had always presumed that Innes was a woman. My apologies Innes!
My attention to detail is appalling!

There are several features of Innes's thimbles that make them special, even unique, in my eyes.

Firstly, the timber used: he used the natural timber of iconic British trees.

Secondly, once turned into a thimble, the wood was polished to reveal the true beauty of the grain and thus the patina – look at the buttery colour of the Box Wood thimble.

Finally, the fineness of Mitchell's drawing of the outline of the actual tree with its name underneath using a hot poker, the skill known as pyrography.

Adding a fine trim of matt gold to the rim of the apex and near the base, completes the treasure.

From a true craftsman these little miniature wonders were 'born'.

I notice that in later editions the gold lines were omitted – you may be able to tell whether yours was one of the original sets made.

Being handturned, the thimble shapes differed over the years and there will always be slight variations in the timber when different trees of the same species were sourced. I have shown all examples.

Sadly, Innes Mitchell never added his signature to his thimbles. They are unique so I hope this latest topic will keep his name associated with these beautifully crafted wooden thimbles from the Scottish Highlands, for many years to come.

The trees set is the most widely collected and there are twenty-two in the series (this includes fruit trees). Being Scottish, Mitchell has added the Scottish or Gaelic name of the tree to a few thimbles in this series. The tree is only drawn on one side when the Gaelic lettering is used, then the English name is included on the verso, which is of plain wood. I have found five examples of thimbles with Gaelic tree names so far.

I have shown the back of some of the tree series thimbles to show the plain timber. What a variety of colours – the pinkness of the pear – the pale silver birch – the deep chocolate of the walnut wood.

I have noticed that with my Mitchell thimbles – now over thirty years old – the wood is darkening in colour.

I don't know if these thimbles were available to purchase as a set.

I have never been interested in collecting sets of thimbles, but I was surprised to find how many of these little tree thimbles live in my treasured Highlands of Scotland collection.

Due to the popularity of the trees series, the Guild encouraged Innes to pyrograph local flowers onto his thimbles.

He mainly used holly timber for these creations and then handpainted the flowers' colours over the pyrographed flower shape.

The foxglove appeared in June 1985 and the others are of 1987 and 1988. There is only a small collection of flowers.

Until I began researching this topic on Innes Mitchell, I hadn't been unaware of his tourism-themed thimbles. The Guild had the Cape Wrath thimbles for sale in October 1987. I have only found three with this theme to date.

The final theme is a commemorative thimble, and it has bilingual lettering.

I can only find Innes Mitchell wooden thimbles for sale by The Thimble Guild for a short period – 1985-1988.

L: one of the first Mitchell thimbles offered for sale by The Guild February 1985 – the ad features how the thimbles were made

R: – this ad of February 1987 features the history of the timber used both ads show the asking price in some ads it mentions "Limited to 150" – this is a small run by the Guild's standards

Once I decided to feature the Innes Mitchell thimbles as a new topic, I looked into where the thimbles were actually made. I don't think you can get to such a remote spot that easily.

Mitchell lived and worked in Sutherland near Cape Wrath on the north-west tip of Scotland.

map showing the remoteness in Scotland of where Innes Mitchell produced his thimbles

Other Scottish thimble topics:
 Carol Edwards of Coll Pottery and Horizon China thimbles
 Highland China thimbles
 Scottish wooden thimbles

Trees

limited to 150 sets

limited to 150 sets

Alder

Apple

seems to be missing the lower gold trim

Ash

Uinnseann

Beech Faidhbhile "Beech"

Box Wood

Chestnut

English Elm

R: no gold trims

Field Maple

Holly

Hornbeam

Irish Yew

showing the heartwood on the apex

Laurel

Lime Teile

L: seems to be missing the lower gold trim

Oak

Pear

Plum

Scottish Laburnum

Silver Birch

Flowers

Tourism

Cape Wrath

showing Durness Lighthouse eleven miles from where thimbles were made sycamore

Suilven Elphin Sutherland

bilingual name of the mountain near where Innes lives

Commemorative

Merry Christmas Nollaig Chridheil

with pyrographed holly
bilingual greeting with extra gilding on the apex centre
tho not dated, these thimbles became available in December 1987

Contributors

Pawel Brzyski | Jean Taylor | Krystyna Zagajewska

This listing of Innes Mitchell thimbles does not purport to be complete or accurate in all aspects. Rather it invites comment and contribution to add to our knowledge.

EMAIL thimbleselect@bigpond.com TO SHARE YOUR KNOWLEDGE

© Sue Gowan
July 2018